March 2012

Seatbelt and restraint safety is the focus for the month of March. Every year there are many people injured by not wearing a seatbelt. Even in minor collisions the types of injuries are higher. Following is a small list of why you should wear your seat belt, not including the $115.00 fine:

- Seat belts hold you securely in place. If you are a driver, this helps you control the car in a crash situation.
- Seat belts slow down the second collision - the human collision. Even in a low-speed crash, a person not wearing a seat belt hits the inside of the car with the force of many times their own weight.
- Seat belts protect everyone in the vehicle. Serious injuries often result when people are thrown into each other during a crash. Seat belts can help prevent this hazard.
- Seat belts give you a greater chance of escaping serious injury. If you are not wearing your seat belt, you could be thrown from your vehicle:
 - through a windshield or door
 - into trees, telephone poles or rocks
 - or run over by your own or someone else's car.

Young children must travel in the appropriate child car seats or booster seats. The driver is responsible for paying the fine if convicted of not having a child younger than 16 years of age correctly secured by the seat belt or a child safety seat. While a child can start using a seat belt once he or she is six years old or weighs more than 18 kilograms, it is recommended children be in an approved booster seat until they turn nine or weigh 37 kilograms.
